

HomeNewsSportReelWorklifeTravel

BBC, 2018

New Zealand bans sales of homes to foreigners

15 August 2018

New Zealand's parliament has banned many foreigners from buying existing homes in the country - a move aimed at making properties more affordable.

The ban only applies to non-residents. Australians and Singaporeans are exempt because of free-trade deals.

New Zealand is facing a housing affordability crisis which has left home ownership out of reach for many.

Low interest rates, limited housing stock and immigration have driven up prices in recent years.

- US applications for New Zealand citizenship jump 70% after election
- The lure of New Zealand for jaded Americans
- China's New Zealand farm-buying runs into opposition

Is it a total ban?

No, only non-residents are affected by the Overseas Investment Amendment Bill, which was passed in a 63-57 vote on Wednesday.

They are now banned from purchasing most types of homes - but they will be able to make limited investments in new apartments in large developments.

Foreigners with residency status in New Zealand - as well as non-resident Australian and Singaporean nationals - are not affected by the ban.

New Zealand's Trade and Economic Development Minister David Parker described the passage of the bill as a "significant milestone".

"This government believes that New Zealanders should not be outbid by wealthier foreign buyers," he said.

ADVERTISEMENT

Ads by Teads

"Whether it's a beautiful lakeside or ocean-front estate, or a modest suburban house, this law ensures that the market for our homes is set in New Zealand, not on the international market."

But opponents said the ban was unnecessary and would not fix any problem.

Foreign ownership and a housing shortage in New Zealand's bigger cities were prominent issues in the run-up to last year's election, which saw the end of nine years of rule by the conservative National Party.

New Zealand now has a centre-left coalition government led by Labour's Jacinda Ardern, the country's youngest female leader.

What's the bigger picture?

The ban follows fears that overseas buyers of homes were putting too much pressure on infrastructure and house prices.

AFP

Chinese investors have been among the biggest and most active offshore buyers of property in the New Zealand market.

Also, some wealthy Americans - like Silicon Valley tech billionaire Peter Thiel - have become New Zealand citizens or have bought property in the country.

Average prices in New Zealand have risen more than 60% in the past 10 years, while in Auckland - the country's largest city - they have almost doubled.

However, the housing market has somewhat cooled in recent months.

In July, the median price for residential property nationwide was NZ$550,000 ($360,500; £284,000), according to data from the Real Estate Institute of New Zealand.

In June, about 82% of houses were bought by New Zealand's citizens or residents, with fewer than 3% of homes going to foreigners.

---

Related Topics

Housing marketNew Zealand

Share this story About sharing

---

More on this story

---

New Zealand minister defends home sale curbs

15 August 2018

US applications for New Zealand citizenship jump 70% after election

14 March 2017

The lure of New Zealand for jaded Americans

27 January 2017

New Zealand tops global list for house price rises

7 September 2016

China's New Zealand farm-buying runs into opposition

29 October 2015

New Zealand country profile

8 June 2020

Asia

HSBC moved scam millions, big banking leak shows

20 September 2020 | UK