Ashburton District Council decides not to sell fresh water rights

'Ashburton District Council [cancels] the sale of water rights to bottled water company NZ Pure Blue.' The initial decision to sell a resource consent that would have enabled the owner to extract up to 45 litres of water per second from the town's aquifer through to 2046 begins a public discussion on fresh water ownership, with the government reiterating its view that no one owns fresh water. Predator free by 2050 target set

The government formally adopts a goal to make New Zealand predator-free by 2050. The late Sir Paul Callaghan was a proponent of this goal and stated: 'It's crazy and ambitious but I think it might be worth a shot.'

Ministry for Vulnerable Children (Oranga Tamariki) announced

This Ministry replaces the Child, Youth and Family government agency. The English name comes under criticism for its use of the word 'vulnerable', with many preferring the broader Māori name. Oranga Tamariki translates to child wellbeing and suggests that all of society is responsible for the wellbeing of New Zealand's children.
