

Coronavirus: Urgently-needed protective equipment touches down in Auckland

05/04/2020

Patrick Gower

Gower, 2020

COVID-19 timeline
5 April 2020

Kiwi nurses threaten to walk off the job due to shortage of masks, gloves

For an airline that has been ripped apart by COVID-19, Chief Pilot Dave Morgan called this a special moment.

"The pilots and those who were involved in the flight were absolutely delighted to bring the flight into New Zealand knowing that what was on board was desperately needed at the moment," he told Newshub.

4m were what are called N95 masks - what frontline nurses and doctors want. And there
0,000 of them.

The delivery was arranged by Anna Mowbray whose family run the Zuru toy company out of China.

"We have literally just been sending staff out through China, just driving them out in hordes to go and find as many supplies as they possibly can," she told Newshub.

Mowbray has sourced the N95 masks at a factory in China.

"We have the world competing for PPE supplies so it is very hard to get your hands on product."

The PPE arrives. Photo credit: Newshub

This is the first of six planes landing in the coming days carrying:

2.5 million disposable masks

50,000 sterilised gowns

140,000 medical alcohol wipes

30,000 plastic face shields

100,000 litres of hand sanitiser

The New Zealand Government - with Mike Bush in his new job as Strategic Operations Oversight in the COVID response - is stoked.

"It's a wonderful example of how the private sector is coming together with Government and communities to make sure that we're best dressed in this fight against COVID-19," Bush says.

But there's more - Mowbray is opening up a supply line, aimed at getting gear to all essential service workers. And later this month it will bring in:

40 million more disposable masks

800,000 more sterilised gowns

750,000 medical glasses and goggles

400,000 more medical alcohol wipes

Another 300,000 litres of hand sanitiser

"It means for New Zealand that we are going to have a stable PPE supply chain - and that's huge, that's fantastic," Mowbray says.

Anna Mowbray. Photo credit: Newshub

The delivery followed a meeting between the Prime Minister of some of New Zealand's biggest business names - Graeme Hart, Craig Heatley, Stephen Tindall, Sam Morgan, Nick Mowbray and Rob Fyfe.

Instead of waiting for bureaucrats to sign-off - the Mowbray family paid for this themselves - and will sell it to the Government at cost.

"Being a Kiwi, I want to make sure that New Zealanders are protected - and are safe," Mowbray says.

A flight coming to the aid - of Kiwis on the frontline.

Prime Minister Jacinda Ardern says she welcomes the arrival of the PPE.

"A major component of the Government's response to COVID-19 has been urgently sourcing PPE to supplement the stockpiles already held by the Ministry of Health and the DHBs," she told Newshub.

"We've been actively working with the private sector alongside our regular suppliers to increase our PPE stocks and top up MoH and DHB stockpiles. There is a lot of PPE arriving in the country in the coming weeks.

"This contribution of 150,000 N95 masks from China is greatly appreciated and supplements the more than 400,000 N95s we produce locally each week at a factory in Whanganui."