aland's prime minister Jacinda Ardern has appointed the 's first openly gay deputy prime minister after her landslide n general elections last month.

Finance Minister Grant Robertson was named deputy prime ο, becoming the first openly gay politician to take the role, while he οining the finance portfolio.

abinet, Ms Arden said, was "incredibly diverse" and included epresentation from minorities and women.

rn has assigned several indigenous Maori lawmakers to top s, including Nanaia Mahuta, who has a moko kauae – a traditional tttoo on the chin – and will take on the role of foreign minister, vin Davis, who will be minister for children.

erston has long been a close friend and political ally of Prime r Ardern and was the chief strategist of Ms Arden's election n. He said he has tried to be a minister for all New Zealanders, thinks it's important for younger members of the LGBT+ nitiy to see people they identify with, taking on top roles.

et a lot of emails and messages from young gay, lesbian, bisexual usgender people who look towards us to provide that kind of role-g," Mr Robertson said. "So, I'll keep doing my job the way that n doing it, but I'm very proud to have the role."

erston replaces Winston Peters as deputy prime minister after nd his New Zealand First party failed to get re-elected. Kelvin as expected to take on the role but said he turned it down to focus their responsibilities.

ERN said all the positions were assigned on merit.

one of the amazing things about New Zealand is that we are often now where all of these questions (about diversity) become dry," she said. "The representation is there. And that is not the first ration."

Our Party won an outright majority in Parliament in the general last month following the success of the government ing the coronavirus pandemic. It was the first time any party had a full majority since New Zealand implemented a proportional system 24 years ago.

Our Party nevertheless signed a "cooperation agreement" with the party on Sunday, which says the two parties will work together on environment and child-wellbeing issues. Two Green Party ers have been given ministerial roles outside of cabinet.

co-leader, James Shaw, will become climate change minister other, Marama Davidson, will have a portfolio focusing on ing family and sexual violence.

ERN demoted some ministers considered to have underperformed her first term, including Phil Twyford, who lost his transport o. He will remain a lower-ranked minister outside of cabinet.

government will be sworn in on Friday.

Many gay politician...never! There have been loads of those around the world who look like a rather desperate attempt to carry on the "progressive NZ" story.

His country people just used to be gay or not gay, adopting the American "peny" gay as so many media sources do is a backwards step.
