Bright-line test for sales of residential property

An officials’ issues paper

June 2015

Prepared by Policy and Strategy, Inland Revenue, and the Treasury
First published in June 2015 by Policy and Strategy, Inland Revenue, PO Box 2198, Wellington 6140.

Bright-line test for sales of residential property – an officials’ issues paper.
CONTENTS

CHAPTER 1
Introduction
How to make a submission

CHAPTER 2
Summary of suggested changes
Acquisition date and disposal
Definition of "residential land"
Main home exception
Exceptions for relationship property and inherited property under the suggested changes
Deductibility of expenditure
Losses
Land-rich companies and trusts

CHAPTER 3
Date of acquisition and disposal
Date of acquisition
Date of disposal
Subdivision of an existing title
Sales of the right to sell
Transitional rules
Disposals under insolvency

CHAPTER 4
Definition of "residential land"
Suggested change
Definition of "land"

CHAPTER 5
Main home exception
Suggested change

CHAPTER 6
Exceptions for inherited property and relationship property
Property transferred on the death of a person
Property transferred under a relationship property agreement

CHAPTER 7
Deductions
The cost of the property can be deducted
Holding costs deductible to the extent sufficient nexus and not private in nature

CHAPTER 8
Treatment of losses
Ring-fencing losses
Losses from transfers to associated persons

CHAPTER 9
Land-rich companies and trusts
Design of anti-avoidance rules

APPENDIX
Proposed wording for charging provision and main home exception
CHAPTER 1

Introduction

1.1 As part of Budget 2015, the Government announced that it would introduce a "bright-line" test for the sale of residential property. The test will require income tax to be paid on any gains from the sale of residential property that is bought and sold within two years, with the exception of the main family home.

1.2 The purpose of the bright-line test is to supplement the "intention test" in the current land sale rules. The intention test makes gains from the sale of real property purchased with an intention of resale taxable.

1.3 The intention test can be difficult to enforce due to its subjectivity. The bright-line test is intended to deal with the problem by supplementing the intention test with an unambiguous objective test.

1.4 The objective nature of the test means the bright-line test will make a sale of residential property taxable when the seller did not acquire the property with an intention of resale and when a person needs to sell property due to circumstances outside of their control. This is unavoidable for the bright-line test to achieve its goal of being objective and unambiguous.

1.5 For the bright-line test to be effective, the number of exceptions should be as few as possible, and tightly defined. However, we consider that some exceptions can be justified for types of acquisitions when the property is the main home of the seller or, in certain circumstances, when the seller did not intend to acquire the property.

1.6 This issues paper discusses the design of the bright-line test, where we have attempted to use existing rules in tax law where possible. This helps provide certainty for taxpayers, by using existing interpretations and guidance when applying the rules. Suggested wording for the charging provision and main home exception is provided in the Appendix. Officials are interested in feedback on the suggested changes outlined in this paper.

How to make a submission

1.7 Officials invite submissions on the suggested changes and points raised in this issues paper. Submissions should be addressed to:

Bright-line test for sales of residential property
C/- Deputy Commissioner, Policy and Strategy
Inland Revenue Department
PO Box 2198
Wellington 6140