

The official website of The British Monarchy

(Royal Household, 2011g)

Choose your Commonwealth Realm

What is a Realm?

Hands of State
A-Z index

Home History of the Monarchy United Kingdom Monarchy

History of the Monarchy

English Monarchs (400 AD - 1603)

Scottish Monarchs (400 AD - 1603)

United Kingdom Monarchs (1603 - present)

The Stuarts

The Hanoverians

Saxe-Coburg-Gotha

The House of Windsor

George V (r. 1910-1936)

Edward VIII (Jan-Dec 1936)

George VI (r. 1936-1952)

The House of Windsor from 1952

Archive footage video gallery

Image gallery

Your last 4 visited pages

History of the Monarchy > The House of Windsor > Edward VIII

History of the Monarchy > The House of Windsor > George V

History of the Monarchy > Saxe-Coburg-Gotha > Edward VII

History of the Monarchy > The Hanoverians > Victoria

Royal Profiles

Her Majesty The Queen

The Prince of Wales

The Princess Royal

George VI (r.1936-1952)

George VI became King unexpectedly following the abdication of his brother, King Edward VIII, in 1936.

A conscientious and dedicated man, he worked hard to adapt to the role into which he was suddenly thrown. Reserved by nature, and of deep religious belief, he was helped in his work by his wife. He had married Lady Elizabeth Bowes-Lyon in 1923.

Click on the image below to view Pathe footage of King George VI presenting new colours to the Grenadier Guards in 1938:

King George VI paid State Visits to France in 1938, and to Canada and the United States in 1939 (he was the first British monarch to enter the United States).

His greatest achievements came during the Second World War, when he remained for most of the time at Buckingham Palace (the Palace was bombed nine times during the war). He and his wife, Queen Elizabeth, visited severely bombed areas in the East End of London and elsewhere in the country, gained him great popularity.

The King developed a close working relationship with his wartime Prime Minister, Winston Churchill, as most of Europe fell to Nazi Germany.

Recognising the total nature of modern warfare, in 1940 the King instituted the George Cross and George Medal, to be awarded for acts of bravery by citizens. In 1942, the George Cross was awarded to the island and people of Malta in recognition of the heroism with which they had resisted the enemy siege.

Having served in the Navy during the First World War, including the Battle of Jutland, the King was anxious to visit his troops whenever possible. He went to France in 1939 to inspect the British Expeditionary Force, and to North Africa in 1943 after the victory of El Alamein.

In June 1944, the King visited his Army on the Normandy beaches 10 days after D-Day, and later that year he visited troops in Italy and the Low Countries.

On VE (Victory in Europe) Day, 8 May 1945, Buckingham Palace was a focal point of the celebrations. The war had immeasurably strengthened the link between the King and his people.

In 1947, the King undertook a major tour of South Africa, accompanied by the Queen and their daughters, Princess Elizabeth and Princess Margaret - the first time a monarch had undertaken a tour with his family.

When India and Pakistan became independent in 1947, George ceased to be Emperor of India. Changes in the Commonwealth meant that its tie was no longer based on common allegiance to the Crown, but upon

Related Images

George VI

Also in this section

The Act of Settlement

The Normans

Henry VIII

Elizabeth I (r.1558-1603)

Other areas of interest

Her Majesty The Queen
The Queen and the UK
The Royal Household
The Queen and the Commonwealth
The current Royal Family
Royal events and ceremonies
Charities and Patronages
The Royal Collection and other collections
The Royal Residences
Images and Broadcasts
Queen and anniversary messages
Latest News and Diary

Other Websites of Interest

The Royal Collection
The Scottish Government
The Welsh Assembly Government

3rd

recognition of the Sovereign as Head of the Commonwealth.

These changes in the Commonwealth relationship and the social reforms of the post-war Labour government occurred against the background of Britain's weak post-war economic position and the beginning of the Cold War, which meant that the privations of war were extended well into the post-war period.

By 1948, it seemed that Britain had overcome the worst hardships of the post-war years, but the strain of the Second World War and the tensions of the post-war period had taken their toll on the King's health. The King failed to recover from a lung operation, and died in his sleep on 6 February 1952 at Sandringham; he was aged 56.

After lying in state at Westminster Hall, the King's funeral was held at St George's Chapel, Windsor, where he lies buried.

At the King's funeral, attached to the Government's wreath was a card on which Churchill had written the phrase inscribed on the Victoria Cross - 'For Valour'.

Read some of King George VI's wartime radio broadcasts (pdf, 112kB)

